Field of the Invention The present invention relates to an optical disc drive for recording data on an optical disc and reproducing data recorded thereon, and more particularly to a method of writing data in an optical disc drive. 2. Description of the Related Art Conventionally, in an optical disc drive, data is written in each area on an optical disc, such as a compact disc (CD), a digital versatile disc (DVD), a digital versatile disk with interactive capability (DVD-ROM), or a writable or re-writable compact disk read only memory (CD-RW or CD-RW-R). The optical disc drive generally writes data on each area using a constant linear velocity (CLV). In such a constant linear velocity, when data is written in a specific area of the optical disc, the drive first reads out data stored in an area located next to the specific area, and then checks the read data. The drive determines the timing to write data in the specific area, based on the difference between the address of the specific area and the address of the next area. When a specific area is determined to be accessed, a rotation speed of the optical disc is changed from a normal rotation speed to a low rotation speed. In this case, when data is written in the specific area, there is a possibility that the written data may be read out erroneously due to noise components included in an electric current passing through the head. Further, when a power failure occurs during a data write operation, a case where data recorded in a specific area may be erased cannot be prevented.[Cystic pancreatic metastasis in advanced ovarian cancer--a case report]. A 48-year-old patient was diagnosed with borderline ovarian tumour, stage Ic (FIGO), followed by diffuse peritoneal metastasis. A laparotomy revealed a mucinous cystadenoma of the tail and a cystic pancreatic metastasis. The pancreatic lesion was resected, while the ovarian tumour was left in situ. The postoperative course was without complications.Many industries may experience fluctuating demands of demand over time. These industries may include, for example, the distribution of chemicals and pharmaceuticals, the food and beverage industry, the electronics industry, the clothing industry, the transportation industry, and the like. The demands of demand may lead to a condition where demand outstrips supply, and/or capacity. When a firm experiences a demand for more product than it has on hand, or available capacity, the firm may increase capacity in order to satisfy demand.. The following notation is used to denote the t_i^{th} transmission time of a certain user:
$$t_i = \sum_{k=1}^{N_{\text{mathrm}}\{s\}} \sum_{k'=1}^{N_{\text{mathrm}}\{r}}$$
